

Fact-Checking Sites

These fact-checking sites specialize in debunking claims and providing objective, researched analysis.

AllSides - An unbiased site featuring news topics from around the world that includes a media-biased comparison chart that shows where the major news providers fall on a given issue.

Deceptive Detective - An infographic from Common Sense Media that helps students become a “online detective” and decipher between fact and fiction.

FactCheck.org - A nice site for fact-checking political news, especially those in which both parties are speaking at the same venue.

Hoax Slayer - Debunks hoaxes regarding email, social media, and internet security, and alerts students to the most recent scams.

NAMLE - The National Association for Media Literacy Education is a great site to find, analyze, and evaluate all forms of communication.

NPR Fact Check - Students can find unbiased information regarding world news, including footnotes to address when news is skewed.

Politifact - My favorite site for checking facts regarding political news that uses a very fun “truth-o-meter.”

Snopes - One of the most popular sites on the web to find evidenced-based news that is cited so students can do their own research as well.
